COMMUNICATOR'S NAME:

John Doe

SELF PERCEPTION

SOCIAL / COMMUNICATION STYLE

These are the results of the computerized analysis of the way in which you perceive yourself. It is designed to reflect the behavioral patterns which you believe you project to others. Only in rare cases will your self-perception completely correspond with the perception of others.

You perceive yourself as possessing an Analytical Social Style. Some of the characteristics of a person operating from your Social / Communication Style are:

- has a very strong preference for structure and bureaucracy when dealing with issues
- is always happy dealing with detail and is highly meticulous - an absolute perfectionist
- has enormous patience and will collect every piece of information, mainly from the past, before coming to a decision
- has a very strong business-like approach and uses logic and reason in dealing with others
- sees being completely objective as adding value to a group, but others may see this as seriously delaying decision-making, especially where any sort of risk is involved
- has an overriding desire to be absolutely right in all dealings and is utterly reliable, always being a person of your word
- can be seen as projecting a very high level of coolness, aloofness, stubbornness and detachment in relationships
- has a very strong desire for rules and regulations
- has a very high preference for dealing with tasks rather than people and loves to work alone on a project that is under your control
- is usually seen by others as always having a very closed and unassuming personality

Your ability to communicate effectively with others will depend on the accuracy of your perception of your behavior and the degree of empathy and flexibility you display.
